At same time, leftwing labour led by militant Agustín announced a mass demonstration to protest against police action.

Heavy U.K. polling as Tories have edge

By DAVID LENNON

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

LONDON — Unseasonably chilly weather did not deter Britain's 40 million voters who turned out yesterday in what looked like being a heavy poll to decide the outcome of what has been called one of the most important elections since World War II.

A record turnout was reported from most parts of the country. Prime Minister Edward Heath went to vote early yesterday, warmed by the knowledge that all the opinion polls gave his Conservative Party a slight lead over Labour. If these predictions prove right he could be in command of a 50 or 60 seat majority in the next Parliament of 635 members.

Also out early was Labour Party leader Harold Wilson who voted in London before heading north to his constituency. He maintained his belief that Labour had closed the gap in the last few days.

However, both leaders knew that it is the showing of the Liberals which could transform the political landscape. Both leading parties acknowledged the advance of the Liberals, but each believed that voters would be drawn from the other party.

It was felt that a balance of power situation might well exist today when account is taken not only of Liberal success but also of the strong support for the Scottish Nationalists and the loss to the Conservatives of some Ulster members.

If a balance of power situation did arise it is unlikely that an administration could be formed today and it could well be early next week before a pact or agreement could be worked out to allow the new Prime Minister to be confident that he could rely on a majority in the House of Commons.

Polling which started at 7 a.m. closed at 10 p.m. (midnight, Israel time). Final results will not be expected before midday tomorrow.

Labour c'ttee meets in bid to abolish factions

By SHAYLA SHAPIRO

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV — The Labour Party's "conciliation committee" yesterday spent three and a half hours in what was described as a cordial discussion on ways to abolish factions and inaugurate a new era of goodwill. The committee adjourned and will meet again today.

The committee of three, including secretary-general Aharon Yadin (Mapai), deputy secretary Avraham Gever (Abudat Ha'avoda) and Moshe Netzer of Rafi, will prepare a formal draft of the numerous suggestions raised during the two sessions of the committee. The draft should indicate practical ways to abolish the factions, hold new party elections, and provide the secretary-general with several secretaries instead of the two political deputies.

However, the key to the government crisis does not seem to lie in the deliberations of this committee, but in whether Defence Minister Moshe Dayan and Transport Minister Shimon Peres would reverse their decision not to join Mrs. Golda Meir's cabinet. There was no indication yesterday that they would do so, although some Rafi key-men have urged Mr. Peres to remain in the government.

An indication of how difficult it is to eliminate "factional thinking" in the Labour Party was a suggestion in the committee that Rafi send other representatives to the Cabinet if Dayan and Peres refuse — although the committee was supposedly called to abolish factions.

The National Religious Party adjourned all coalition talks till Sunday. Because of the extraordinary meeting of the cabinet on the Syrian disengagement, the NRP decided to call a meeting of its executive in Jerusalem on Sunday afternoon, while its Knesset faction is likely to meet in Jerusalem in the morning.

Meanwhile, Independent Liberal leader Gideon Hausner M.K. yesterday told his party's executive he would agree to serve in the new Cabinet as Minister without Portfolio, together with Tourism Minister Moshe Kol, despite his earlier insistence to serve only as Justice Minister. He told the meeting he had given in on this point only because of the Prime Minister's refusal to appoint him Minister of Justice in place of Haim Zadok and because he wanted to make sure that the Independent Liberals should have two Ministers in the new Cabinet.

As the reconciliation talks within the Labour Party continued, the young guard of Mapam, Labour's partner in the Alignment, resolved yesterday to press for the appointment of Yitzhak Rabin as Defence Minister.

Sadat tells Assad of approval of military separation plan; Syrian talks seen in fortnight

Dr. K in Jerusalem today

By DAVID LANDAU

Jerusalem Post Diplomatic Correspondent

The place, time and format of Israel-Syria disengagement talks are due to be decided this weekend by the two parties and U.S. Secretary Henry Kissinger, and the talks could well begin within a fortnight, informed sources said in Jerusalem last night. The Secretary will visit Israel briefly today to receive from Premier Meir Israel's "ideas" on disengagement, which he will take with him to President Assad in Damascus.

Yesterday the Cabinet met in Jerusalem to hear from Mrs. Meir and Ministers Eban and Dayan on their talks with the Secretary Wednesday, when he brought from Damascus to Jerusalem the Israel POW list and the news that the Syrians would allow the Red Cross to visit them today.

Israel's demand for the lists and the visits before any talks, and Syria's refusal to comply, had been holding up the disengagement talks until now.

According to the schedule meticulously worked out by the Secretary, the POWs will have been visited by the time Dr. Kissinger and Mrs. Meir meet in Tel Aviv at noon to discuss the Israel disengagement "ideas."

The place, time and format question revolves around Syrian insistence that Egypt play a major role in the disengagement talks — almost an "auspices" role. Syria has declared its preference for Geneva as the venue, and its suggestion as to format is a revived Israel-Egypt military working group with Syrian officers taking part too. Sitting the talks in Geneva would also presumably allow for close Soviet interest and influence.

Israel does not rule out Egyptian participation, but insists that the Syrians, not the Egyptians, do the actual negotiating, and, above all, that the Syrians sign an eventual agreement. Israel would prefer a spot on the front-line as the site of the talks after the style of the now-famous U.N. tent at Kilometer 101, Israel envisages U.N. auspices (probably of Gen. Enzio Siliavuo, the UNF Commander). This worked well on the southern front and it holds out the added advantage of preventing a Soviet role.

Observers here expect the talks to be long and arduous. The central issues will be:

- Territorial claims — Syria demands that a slice of the pre-1973 Golan (west of the "violet line"), including the town of Kunetra, be ceded to her as part of the disengagement. Israel's position is that the disengagement must be effected within the territory newly occupied in the October war.

- Linkage — Syria demands that the disengagement accord be explicitly linked to an Israel undertaking to vacate the entire Golan. A statement released in Damascus on Wednesday claimed that Dr. Kissinger had promised the disengagement would be the first stage of a total Israeli withdrawal.

- POW exchange — Israel demands that this be negotiated at the outset of the talks. U.S. officials agreed.

Waldheim may call U.N. Council session

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter

U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim was yesterday alerted to the possibility of having the Security Council summon an emergency session to delegate a U.N. force to the Golan front once Secretary of State Henry Kissinger succeeds in achieving an Israeli-Syrian disengagement agreement.

The force was expected to be set up with some 2,500 men in line with the U.N. Emergency Force dispatched to the Suez Canal front last October. The Syrian front is currently supervised only by the pre-October war force of U.N. observers.

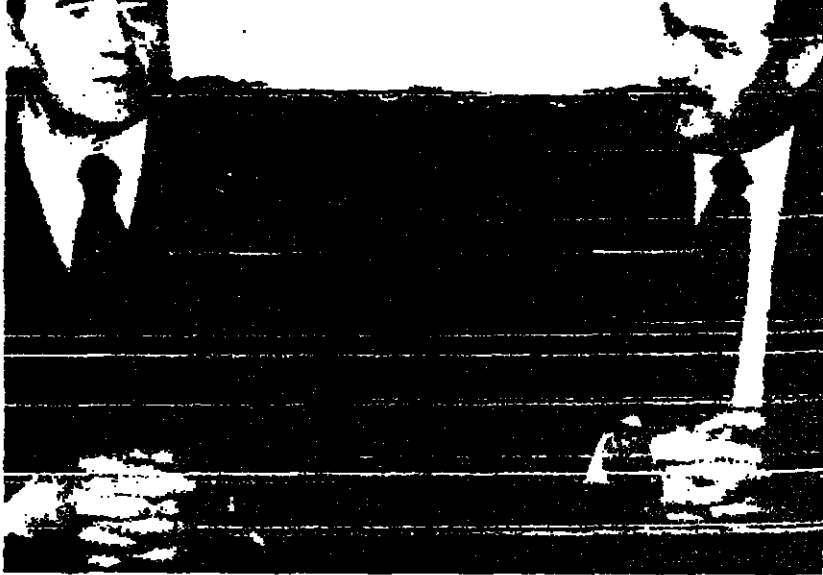

Waldheim was originally scheduled to visit Egypt and Israel early next week following his current African tour. But developments over Syria might compel Waldheim to return to New York.

By ANAN SAFADI, Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat last night communicated to Syrian President Hafez Assad what was believed to have been Cairo's approval of a formula for military disengagement between Syria and Israel. The formula was understood to have been worked out by U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger largely on the basis of Israel's views which are to be submitted to Dr. Kissinger today in the form of official proposals.

The Egyptian leader's contact with his Syrian counterpart was reported by Sadat himself following a five-hour meeting with Dr. Kissinger.

It is believed the formula would follow the pattern of the Israel-Egyptian accord which began with a Kissinger-authored cease-fire stabilization agreement on separation of forces and negotiations in accordance with Security Council resolution 242.

LISTS OF WAR DEAD DUE Mar. 10

Highest percentage of officers

By ZEEV SCHUL

Jerusalem Post Military Correspondent

TEL AVIV — Israel's casualty lists of the October War including the semi-attrition period up to February 12 (subsequently all casualties were made public immediately after the next of kin were informed) will be distributed to the families of the deceased on March 10.

Copies of the brochure, listing 2,521 names, will be available at special stands in main post offices for free distribution the following day, March 11. The stands will be draped with the national colours and flanked by two soldiers.

The lists give the name, rank and home town as well as the names of both parents. The lists do not include the serial number nor identify the unit of the fallen. The army spokesman said here yesterday that a yiskor (memorial) volume, the third to be put out, will probably follow in due course and include additional details of the men, including pictures, short biographies and other details.

The lists omit the names of 32 of the verified casualties at the specific request of their next of kin and also the names of the 18 men still missing on the Golan Heights and whose names were not included in the list of 62 soldiers brought here by Dr. Kissinger on Wednesday. They also were omitted at the request of their families — apparently in the hope that the men may have survived. But informed sources said there is concrete evidence of the fact that 14 or 15 of the men still missing were killed in the fighting.

In the 1967 war 284 prisoners were killed out of a total of 777 war dead and the percentage of officers killed was 20 per cent — at that time considered disproportionately higher than customary in any other army. During the Sinai campaign of 1956, 80 out of a total of 171 killed were privates.

These figures were, as the army spokesman pointed out to military correspondents here yesterday, the strongest refutation of theories being heard that the October war was "the war of the privates."

A breakdown of the ranks of the dead of this war reveals that it cost Israel the highest percentage of officers — 606 or almost one-quarter of the total fatalities. They include one officer with the rank of aluf, two alufei-mishne (colonels), 25 sganef-alufim (lieutenant-colonels) and over 80 ravel-sranim (majors). Of the total, 2,521 dead only 123 were privates.

Sadat's emergence from the Kissinger meeting was highlighted by his announcement on the resumption of full diplomatic relations between Cairo and Washington. This meant that the ambassadors-designate which both countries exchanged last November would take over full duties as their governments' representatives and that the American flag would fly again in Cairo for the first time since 1967.

Sadat said he had taken the move in view of the fact that the U.S. has adopted "a new and constructive attitude" in the Middle East. He added that Dr. Kissinger's current praiseworthy efforts "make it clear that America has good intentions towards a solution" of the conflict.

Sadat climaxed his declared reconciliation with the U.S. by announcing that he had extended an invitation to President Nixon to visit Egypt. "I expect President Nixon to come, but no date has been fixed yet," Sadat said in his press statements which were broadcast by Cairo radio networks.

In contrast to previous meetings with Kissinger, Sadat yesterday appeared in a blue striped civilian suit and not in military uniform.

When asked whether there was a significance in the change of uniform, Sadat said that the gesture did not mean the war was over. But he noted that "a new era" was emerging.

Both Sadat and Kissinger came out of their talks cheerful, indicating their confidence in achieving an early military disengagement between Syria and Israel and a subsequent reconvening of the Geneva Middle East peace conference for its second phase.

Cairo radio last night noted, part of the Sadat-Kissinger talks were attended by Egyptian War Minister General Ahmed Ismail Aly and Chief of Staff General Mohammed Abdul-Ghani Gamasy, implying that the Egyptians were seeking a major role on behalf of Syria on the Golan disengagement.

It was not clear by last night whether Dr. Kissinger would return to Cairo. Indications were that the State Secretary would still go to Saudi Arabia to seek an end to the Arab boycott against the U.S. and other western countries. He was also expected to visit Amman, although the Jordanian monarch was yesterday reported to be going to Washington soon for talks on the Middle East. Hussein would afterwards visit Cairo at the invitation of Sadat who is seen aiming to unite the ranks of Syria, Jordan and the Palestinians with Egypt in anticipation of the renewed talks at Geneva.

As Dr. Kissinger leaves Cairo this morning, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko is expected to fly into the Egyptian capital.

Gromyko is scheduled to confer with Sadat tomorrow. The Soviet minister yesterday held talks with the Syrian President but no details were disclosed. Gromyko arrived in Damascus unexpectedly on Wednesday, just hours after Kissinger had left for Jerusalem. Gromyko serves as a co-chairman along with Dr. Kissinger at the Geneva Middle East talks.

21 taken in Hermon garrison are listed as PoWs by Syria

By ZEEV SCHUL
POST Military Correspondent
TEL AVIV. — All 21 soldiers who survived the Syrian onslaught on the Hermon mountain garrison are alive in Syria. Their names were among the 65 on the prisoner of war list brought from Damascus on Wednesday by U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

The 65 include a number of air crewmen shot down over Syrian territory, paratroopers and tank crews as well as a handful of survivors of front line defenses taken by the Syrians during the first 24 hours of the October war. Observers here believe the Syrians will today permit the first visit to the prisoners of an International Red Cross delegation. The scheduled arrival of U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger is expected to lend weight to this decision.

Syria claims the prisoners are now being treated in accordance with international rules. Communications Minister Shimon Peres yesterday warned against expecting the imminent release of the PoWs.

"Israel has not made the release of the PoWs a condition for the opening of talks," Mr. Peres said. He was addressing students during a question-and-answer session at Tel Aviv University.

Mr. Peres was optimistic on the chances of reaching a settlement with the Syrians. He told the students the visit of Dr. Kissinger might see an opportunity for dialogue with Syria similar to that Israel conducted with Egypt. "This would make it possible for us to chart a separation of forces map, bring about the release of the PoWs and create a new climate of relations between Israel and Syria."

Israel's position was that talks would be limited to areas whose status has been altered since the outbreak of the Yom Kippur War, i.e. the areas which Israel occupied beyond the "1949 line."

As for the next phase of the talks with Egypt, the Minister said that they should involve a permanent settlement and an end to hostility between the sides.

He saw "no point whatever" in talks on the disengagement of forces with Jordan "since there is no problem of great military forces positioned against each other on that frontier. What is the point of emptying the Jordan valley and filling it up with Uner troops?" Mr. Peres asked.

He said the problems facing King Hussein tend to prevent his participation in peace talks with Israel as he must maintain a special image vis-a-vis the Arab world, especially in view of the fact that the Palestinian terror movement constitutes a far greater danger to the Jordanian King than it does to Israel.

He did not know whether Rafi would join the new government, but said that the government must concern itself with the changes in the Arab world and ensure that Israel's military might was up to any possible future challenge.

ISRAEL LEAVES CANAL MONDAY

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The last Israeli Army units stationed on the banks of the Suez Canal will vacate their positions on Monday morning, March 4.

Uner forces will take over the area and hold it for the next 24 hours — the longest "buffer-time" of all five evacuation stages — in order to enable Israeli units to pull back and regroup behind the protection of their new lines.

THINNING OUT

Meanwhile, the mutual thinning out of the Egyptian and Israeli armies in the so-called "demilitarized zones," east and west of the Uner buffer zone, is continuing at its programmed pace. This includes the Army Spokesman said here yesterday, the total dismantling of all Sam installations. (Actually, none are required for the efficient Sam-6 types, since these are self-propelled, are carried either on tracked vehicles or regular trucks, and can be brought up to the front lines on short notice.)

The Egyptian artillery does require preliminary preparation of positions, since it consists largely of towed and unprotected units. These, however, can be immediately detected by spy aircraft as well as the Uner patrols expected to tour the Egyptian and Israeli lines. All but 36 Egyptian 122mm guns are to be pulled out of this side of the Canal.

MINE PROBES

The Egyptians are also continuing their preparations for the clearing of the Suez Canal. They are now believed to be probing for mines and unexploded shells in the waterway, and will next probably raise the ships, deliberately sunk to block the waterway. They are expected to subsequently start dredging work and shoring up of the embankment, in the final phase, and to restore the canal to its pre-war shipping capacity by next autumn. The canal will remain barred to shipping under Israeli flags, but Israel-bound cargoes will be allowed through.

Discharge recommended of 15,000 key workers

Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV. — The nine public committees appointed by the Labour Ministry three months ago to review applications for the discharge of key workers from active reserve duty have reviewed 32,000 applications and recommended the discharge of 15,000 men. Of these, 4,500 have actually been discharged.

These figures were revealed here yesterday at a meeting of these committees to hear an address by outgoing Labour Minister Yosef Almog. Mr. Almog said the committees proved a success, but since nine were no longer needed, they will merge into three committees as of Sunday.

T.A. Maccabi hoopsters beat Belgium 84:74

Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter
TEL AVIV. — Tel Aviv Maccabi's basketballers last night bowed out of this year's European Cup championship even though they scored an 84:74 win over Belgian champions Aural of Antwerp, before 6,000 spectators at the Yad Elihu Sports Palace.

It was a fast game, but lacked tension, as both teams knew the outcome would not enable either to make the semi-finals of the cup race. At times the game provided brilliant basketball with occasional flashes of individual flare, but the shooting left something to be desired.

Maccabi held the lead — between 4 and 10 points — throughout, leading 41:33 at the half. Tel Brodie and Bill Pless were outstanding for Tel Aviv, and were top scorers with 24 and 23 points, respectively. Jack Gillespie, Antwerp's American star, was top scorer for the guests, with 25 points.

'U.S. Jews hurt by Who is a Jew crisis'

Israel's coalition crisis over the "Who is a Jew" issue is harmful to American Jewish unity, Jacob Stein, former president of the Conference of Major American Jewish Organizations, said in an Israel Television interview last night.

Mr. Stein said that the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations has broken away from the Synagogue Council of America, which acts as the overall representative body of Orthodox, Conservative and Reform Judaism in the U.S. If the breach widens, it will harm efforts for increasing political support for Israel, he said.

Mr. Stein added that American Jews could not understand why Israel's leaders are having so much trouble in forming a government capable of coping with the tangle of issues that will determine the country's future.

Syrian 'atrocities victim' praised treatment here

By GEORGE LEONOT
Jerusalem Post Reporter

A Syrian pilot whose case was cited by Syria at the UN on Wednesday as an example of Israeli "atrocities" against prisoners had nothing but praise for the medical attention and general treatment he was receiving when he talked with a delegation of Jerusalem residents last December.

The seven-member delegation represented Meditran, an inter-communal Jerusalem organization seeking to promote contacts between the city's religious communities. They visited Lt. Col. Adnan El Haj Khedr, 36, at Shmuel Harofe Hospital last Dec. 23.

On Wednesday, Syria's ambassador to the UN, Haissam Kelani, in a letter to UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, alleged the Israelis amputated the officer's legs "solely in order to mutilate him." The Syrian complaint, which previously had been presented to the International Red Cross, stated: "According to a news item published in The Jerusalem Post of December 23, 1973, Israel claims that Lt. Col. Adnan el Haj Khedr was taken prisoner when his helicopter was shot down and that his legs were broken and subsequently amputated." A European newspaper asserts that the amputation took place in a field hospital, although operations of this kind should not be performed in such hospitals.

"Some of the soldiers who were on board the same helicopter succeeded in escaping have asserted that as soon as their craft crashed on a public highway near the village of Kafra-Naffakh, they were fired upon, and at that time their commander, Adnan el Haj Khedr, was still unhurt, a fact which proves beyond all doubt that the Israelis amputated his legs when there was no need for doing so, solely in order to mutilate him."

A photograph taken of Lt. Col. Khedr at the field hospital was shown to the Meditran group who visited him in December by Shmuel Harofe director, Dr. Walter Davidson. It showed the wounded pilot with one hideously crushed leg almost entirely severed below the knee, hanging on by a tendon and some skin. The other leg had been cut free by the cool, determined colonel with his service knife in a rare instance of self-preservation before he was taken prisoner. Dr. Davidson said there was no doubt that the rapid amputation and treatment of his limbs and blood infusions had saved Col. Khedr's life.

'No danger of unemployment'

There is no danger of unemployment this year, Minister of Commerce and Industry Haim Bar-Lev told the Knesset Economic Committee on Wednesday. However, he predicted a drop of approximately seven per cent in personal consumption, compared with last year.

According to Mr. Bar-Lev, new investment in industry this year will reach IL1,700m.

KISSINGER HERE TODAY

Ministerial Committee on Security. Reportedly, the ministers discussed only the general "ideas" which Mrs. Meir will present to the Secretary today. An official communiqué said there would be another Cabinet discussion of the disengagement issue on Sunday. At that meeting the ministers, having heard from Dr. Kissinger in Damascus the Syrian reaction to Israel's "ideas," will formulate the more detailed principles to guide Israel's negotiations when the disengagement talks begin.

There has been some speculation the Secretary might send his assistant, Joseph Sisco, back to Jerusalem on Sunday to hear a more detailed presentation of Israel's position.

Well-placed Israeli sources stressed yesterday that Wednesday's talks with the Secretary had taken a very general form, and they could only have been described as "substantive" in the very loosest definition of the term. These sources confirmed that there had been maps, but explained that the maps had been spread merely to show where the Israeli settlements were situated on the Golan and to illustrate topographical problems — not to draw any disengagement lines.

U.S. officials on Wednesday night had given out that the talks were "substantive." This was seen here as their effort to satisfy the long-standing Syrian insistence that the PoW lists-and-visits issue be settled only within the context of substantive disengagement talks.

The White House statement of Wednesday announcing Syrian agreement on the lists-and-visits demand said only that Israel would present its disengagement "ideas" to the Secretary today, making no mention of any prior substantive talks. That announcement was intended to meet Israel's insistence that the lists-and-visits question be settled before any substantive talks began.

U.S. officials accompanying the Secretary have stressed in their conversations with Israeli officials and in private talks their feeling that Syria is softening its extremist positions and adopting a more moderate posture. The Secretary himself is reported to have spoken in this vein in his meeting Wednesday with Mrs. Meir.

The Americans freely admit that a good deal of such reassuring reports on their part — backed up by corroborating actions by the Syrians — will be needed to reduce the residue of suspicion and hostility which 25 years of dealings with Damascus have left with Israel.

Three dead on roads

Three men were killed in two accidents yesterday.

A trailer-truck carrying chemicals collided with a pick-up van on airport road outside Haifa, killing two of the van's occupants and seriously injuring the third. One of the dead men was identified as Menashe Debat, 31, of Jerusalem. The other's identity was not ascertainable last night.

Thomas Rosenwasser, of Kiryat Haim, was fatally injured when his car collided with an oncoming bus. He died on arrival at Government Hospital in Nahariya. In another collision, on the Kiryat Shmona road, between a truck and a car, four persons were injured, two of them seriously.

Likud man hits leadership of his own party

The heads of the Likud failed and should resign, Dr. Yehuda Peled, Mayor of Ramat Gan, said last night in an interview broadcast on Israel Television's "Mabat" programme.

Dr. Peled, a member of the Liberal Party, a major component of the Likud, was quoted in a statement he made Wednesday in a speech before the Party's young guard. The veteran leadership in Likud, he said, including the Likud, however, it prepared to yield its place to younger forces, he added.

That the Likud's leaders failed is clear from the fact the opposition failed to gain in the elections despite the victory of the Yom Kippur War, Dr. Peled said. The election results showed, that the public does not have faith in its leaders.

Amiel Najar has been appointed Ambassador-at-Large and advisor to the Foreign Ministry, it was announced in Jerusalem yesterday. Mr. Najar, 61, is a year completed a tour of duty as ambassador to Italy and also served as ambassador to Japan and Belgium.

Lahat commission on collapse of three-storey annex

Tel Aviv building inspectors found 'inadequate'

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV. — A special inquiry commission set up by Mayor Shimon Peres to investigate the collapse of a three-storey annex to an apartment house, in the Bnei Brak quarter, and that inspectors earlier sent to investigate the soundness of the structure had lacked the necessary professional knowledge for the job. The commission is composed of a controller Zvi Ayalon, head of a building section of the Israeli Standards Institute, Dr. Moshe Tel-ler and engineer Shimon Yaron of the Association of Engineers and Architects. Their report criticizes the inability of the municipal building department to cope with unsafe structures. The situation, they note, is particularly grave considering the condition of some of the city's older buildings and the building methods used in the city's first years.

Egged man quits over merger issue

Jerusalem Post Staff
TEL AVIV. — The chairman of the Egged Secretariat, Israel Gil, handed in his resignation yesterday to the bus cooperative's executive body — following a decision taken by Egged members in a referendum last Tuesday not to merge with the Dan bus cooperative.

It is learned that Mr. Gil feels the decision was contrary to Egged's best interests and that he cannot assume the responsibility of carrying it out. The Egged Executive has declined to accept Mr. Gil's resignation and asked him to reconsider. Transport Minister Shimon Peres said yesterday that his Ministry would review the division of bus lines in the Dan Region between the two cooperatives in the light of the Egged decision. He said that Egged was free to decide on whether to merge with Dan or not, "but as Minister of Transport, I have an obligation to the two million passengers who travel in the buses every day."

J'lem Eban and Jobert. The foreign ministers of Israel and France will exchange official visits during this year, officials in Jerusalem confirmed yesterday. 315 convictions for careless day driving

Jerusalem Post Reporter
A total of 315 drivers have been convicted of driving on their careless day and proceedings against another 258 are still pending, Police Minister Hillel said in reply to a question in the Knesset on Wednesday. The courts imposed fines up to IL1,000 and in some cases suspended the drivers' licences for various periods.

FIXED PROCEDURE

The Commission found that there is no fixed procedure in the municipal construction department for a mandatory follow-up on buildings in which danger signs have appeared. The investigators also reported that debris from the collapsed balconies investigated was cleared in such a manner as to hamper further investigation.

Tennis meet cancelled after Jakarta hosts bar Israeli players

By JACK LEON
Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter
TEL AVIV. — The Asian Lawn Tennis Federation has cancelled next week's third Asian amateur tennis championships in Jakarta "because of Indonesia's inability to invite Israel."

The Israel Lawn Tennis Association (ILTA) yesterday "warmly welcomed" the surprise decision, and renounced by offering Israel as the venue for the 1975 Asian championships.

News of the cancellation of the tournament, scheduled for March 6-10, was announced in a terse cable from Asian Federation Secretary R.H. Kahane in New Delhi. It also said the Federation's annual general meeting in Jakarta on March 8 will not take place. The championships were to have been held under the auspices of the 17-nation Federation, of which Israel was a founder-member in 1964.

The Asian body's action followed a strongly-worded protest sent it on Tuesday by the ILTA, after it was learned that Israel would be barred from the event. In addition, the Indonesian LTA ignored Israel's request for entry visas for her players and Congress representatives.

ILTA chairman Avram Feiger told The Post yesterday he was pleased "the Asian Federation has supported Israel's stand against political discrimination, but we regret that some member-nations of the group have violated this principle and mixed politics with sport."

He said that in the ILTA's official invitation to the Asian Federations here, Israel would welcome attention to hold next year's championship and guarantee entry visas to every Asian country wishing to participate, irrespective of whether they have diplomatic relations with us.

In addition to Indonesia, the Asian Federation includes four Muslim states: Afghanistan, Iran, Malaysia and Pakistan, with none of which Israel has official diplomatic relations.)

ILTA is now also "in dispute" with its Iranian opposite number over the European Zone Davis Cup preliminary between the two countries. Although the Davis Cup nations committee accepted ILTA's explanation that Israel could not play the tie as scheduled last October because of the war, and ruled that a new date should be fixed, the Iranians have constantly refused to do this. Last week they called for a walkover into the first-round proper of the competition, a demand which Israel is rejecting out of hand. The tie must be completed by April 6.

Reuters reports from Jakarta: The Indonesian Foreign Ministry yesterday confirmed that no visas would be issued to Israelis wishing to take part in the Asian tennis championships in Jakarta next month.

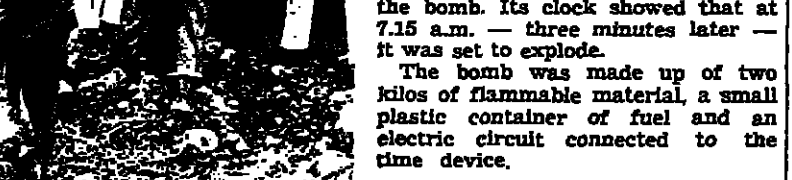

Indonesia also wanted the tournament to be postponed until April for technical reasons, he said. He added that the decision not to invite Israel was in line with government policy.

J'lem confirms visits by Eban, Jobert

Jerusalem Post Staff
The foreign ministers of Israel and France will exchange official visits during this year, officials in Jerusalem confirmed yesterday. There had been reports for some weeks that contacts were proceeding between Jerusalem and Paris with a view to normalizing relations, strained since 1967.

Israel's ambassador to France, Mr. Asher Ben-Natan, met with French Foreign Minister Michel Jobert on Wednesday and presented him with Israel's formal invitation.

Mr. Jobert's visit to Israel will take place later in the year — after the visit of Israel's Mr. Eban to Paris.

Stabbing ruled self-defence

TEL AVIV. — A man who stabbed the ex-husband of a woman friend three times in the chest was acquitted by the District Court here this week, after he convinced the court he acted in self-defence.

Meir Debre, 30, a local resident, was charged with stabbing Shmuel Gipestein last August, at the home of Gipestein's former wife Dafna. Gipestein, the court found, was jealous of his ex-wife, whom Debre befriended, and accused the latter of being the cause of the couple's divorce. He had assaulted Debre and had threatened to kill him if he continued to see his ex-wife.

Debre subsequently purchased a switch blade in order to defend himself, and at the same time complained to the police of Gipestein's threats. Last August, however, Gipestein returned from a walk with his four-year-old son, and found Debre alone in Dafna's apartment. Though he was forbidden to enter the apartment, he barged in and began to beat the weaker Debre — and the latter stabbed him in self-defence.

Japan faces heavy deficit in meeting rising oil prices

BANGKOK (Reuters). — Japan has recorded its lowest annual growth rate of the postwar period and faces a multi-million dollar deficit this year because of higher oil prices, it was disclosed here yesterday.

Reishi Teshima, Japanese representative to a conference on the energy crisis, told delegates from 36 countries that government forecasts for fiscal year 1974 put the real economic growth rate at 2.5 per cent, compared with the previous annual average of 10 per cent.

This was "the lowest figure the Japanese economy has ever experienced in the postwar period," he said.

He added that imports of crude oil in 1974 would cost Japan about $15,000m. compared with $7,000m. to $8,000m. for the current fiscal year leading to an estimated deficit of $4,800m.

In Tokyo, business leaders came under sharp criticism again yesterday as a special three-day debate on allegations of profiteering ended in the Diet (Parliament).

A total of 23 big company presidents appeared before the Lower House Budget Committee to answer allegations of profiteering, hoarding and market cornering during the oil crisis.

The companies under fire ranged from an electric appliance manufacturer to paper and synthetic detergent producers.

Japanese public employees, meanwhile, were on a collision course with the government last night after Chief Cabinet Secretary Susumu Nakano warned them that a strike called for today was illegal.

He also said that stern action would be taken against public workers — who are forbidden by law from striking — if the 24-hour walkout took place.

The government's attitude was backed up by a Supreme Court ruling that public employees were subject to harsher disciplinary measures than would normally be expected for workers in private enterprise.

UN will probe border dispute of Iraq, Iran

UNITED NATIONS (AP). — The U.N. Security Council yesterday decided on a one-man, three-month investigation of border trouble between Iran and Iraq.

French Ambassador Louis de Guiringaud, Council President for February, called a meeting yesterday afternoon to read out a consensus on the Council's behalf, calling for the inquiry.

The meeting was the Council's third in 14 days on a February 12 Iraqi complaint of a February 10 Iranian attack, countered by Iranian charges of Iraqi attacks.

The President made the arrangements on Wednesday night when Iran and Iraq agreed on the text of a consensus they had got from Iraq's fellow nonpermanent members of the Council and revised in negotiations through him.

U.S. Army may appeal freeing Calley on bail

WASHINGTON (AP). — The U.S. Army said on Wednesday that it has not decided whether to appeal against a judge's order freeing Lt. William Calley on bail while his murder conviction in the My Lai massacre case is being reviewed.

"A possible appeal is under study," a spokesman said, while Secretary of the Army Howard Callaway conferred with his top civilian and military lawyers.

One senior lawyer, describing the development as unique in a case of this kind, told a reporter, "We are scratching our heads right now" on how to proceed.

Meanwhile, the Army spokesman said that military police guards have been removed from Calley's quarters at Fort Benning, Georgia, and that he is free to come and go as he wishes, with no requirement that he report to his military superiors for any assignment.

Calley has been under house arrest since April 1971, shortly after he was convicted by a court-martial of premeditated murder of at least 22 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai, South Vietnam, in March 1968.

The Soviet Tass News Agency expressed disapproval over Calley's release on bail.

"So this hangman of the Vietnamese people has been released," Tass said in a report from New York.

It said that after the My Lai massacre became known, "authorities hastened to dismiss those responsible for it with Calley being left as a scapegoat."

"Now the American judicial authorities have decided to correct his 'mistake' by setting Calley free on a ridiculous small bail of $1,000."

"Calley himself, motivating his petition to the court of appeals, said cynically that he might still be useful to society."

The death penalty could be imposed under federal law only for treason, espionage and murder and for such crimes as kidnapping and aircraft hijacking when death results.

The bill is designed to overcome a 1972 Supreme Court decision holding that the death penalty, as applied under most federal and state laws, was unconstitutional.

Mafia chieftain surrenders after 2 years in hiding

NEW YORK (UPI). — A Mafia chieftain, named by an underworld informant as the man who ordered the assassination of mobster Joseph "Crazy Joe" Gallo, surrendered to police yesterday after nearly two years in hiding.

Joseph Yacovelli, 46, reputed to be acting head of the Joseph Colombo crime family, walked unannounced into the offices of a radio station which contacted the police. He was later arraigned as a material witness in the Gallo case before Manhattan Criminal Court Judge Jawn Sandifer and ordered to appear at the Manhattan district attorney's office on March 8 for questioning.

Gallo was gunned down on April 7, 1972, as he celebrated his 43rd birthday at a restaurant in Manhattan's Italian Quarter.

The killing climaxed a long-standing feud between the crime syndicates headed by Gallo and the Mafia chieftain Joseph Colombo Sr.

U.S. may restore death penalty

WASHINGTON (AP). — The U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee approved a bill on Wednesday providing for restoration of the death penalty in certain circumstances, as urged by President Nixon.

The death penalty could be imposed under federal law only for treason, espionage and murder and for such crimes as kidnapping and aircraft hijacking when death results.

The bill is designed to overcome a 1972 Supreme Court decision holding that the death penalty, as applied under most federal and state laws, was unconstitutional.

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP). — A New York State man was in fair condition yesterday, recovering from a rare operation in which surgeons removed, repaired and reimplanted his cancerous kidney.

Surgeons at Albany Medical Center removed a growth the size of a small grapefruit from the lone kidney of Werner Schessing, 51, in a nine-hour procedure on February 11, a hospital spokesman said. The organ, reduced to about one-third the size of a normal kidney, was then sewn together and reconnected to Schessing's body.

Schessing's other kidney had been removed 10 years ago by surgeons in his native Germany after it became tubercular.

His remaining segment of kidney should provide him with adequate kidney functions, barring complications, his physicians said. He is expected to be discharged within a week.

Schessing, a carpenter, moved to the U.S. in 1960.

The operation involved seven surgeons. The cancerous kidney was removed, placed atop a new operating "bench," and attached to a machine which cooled and preserved the organ. For the next 10 hours, one group of surgeons worked on the kidney removing a "grapefruit-sized" tumour and sewed together the remaining healthy tissue. Another group explored for possible further malignancies, but found none.

The newly-implanted kidney began functioning less than an hour after Schessing was removed from the recovery room.

Beirut press sees peace prospects now brighter

BEIRUT (Reuters). — Lebanese newspapers yesterday front-paged the current Middle East tour of U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and the arrival of his Soviet counterpart, Andrei Gromyko, in Damascus on an announced visit.

Their comments centred largely on Dr. Kissinger's success in obtaining a list of Israeli prisoners in Syria since the October war.

"An-Nahar" said the chances for peace were now stronger than a resumption of fighting in the area, after Dr. Kissinger had obtained the list of Israeli prisoners.

"The logic of a peaceful settlement has proved to be stronger than the minor obstacles to peace... and though there remain some reservations over such logic, the possibility of achieving the results desired in both Syria and Israel will fling open the road to success," "An-Nahar" added.

Kissinger's current tour would be a decisive one regarding the resumption of the Geneva Middle East peace talks, it added.

"Egypt is linked with Syria, and Syria with the Palestinians and all with the oil embargo. Achieving a Syrian-Israeli agreement on the prisoners, the refugees and disengagement is a basic and perhaps the minimum condition for the lifting of the embargo," the newspaper said.

Another daily, "Al-Anwar," said Washington knew well that lifting the oil embargo depends on the withdrawal from the Golan Heights and therefore Dr. Kissinger will not go back to Washington without persuading Israel to disengage.

"The game is not one of bluff as portrayed by the U.S., where oil ball hits that of withdrawal collide with the ball of peace. Arabs hold the trump card. Washington can only play the role of mediator in a deal where Arabs are the winners," "Al-Anwar" said.

"Al Hayat" said it believed Soviet Union supported Dr. Kissinger's current efforts, as a from Soviet Communist Party leader Leonid Brezhnev to Syrian President Assad preceded Kissinger's arrival in Damascus on Tuesday.

"Though the contents of the letter have not been published, the American Secretary of State's list of Israeli prisoners may direct result of this letter," the newspaper said.

The arrival of Gromyko in Damascus on an announced visit raised many questions as to what Foreign Minister did in such a step during the Israeli disengagement talks at the Suez Canal front.

The newspaper asked whether it was because the Syrian situation was more difficult than that of Egypt, thus requiring the efforts of the two superpowers.

150 terrorists, on hunger strike in Lebanese jails

BEIRUT (AP). — Some 150 ex-Palestinian terrorists have gone on a hunger strike in Lebanese prisons, demanding trial or immediate release, sources reported yesterday.

Most of the strikers have been in jail since the 1969 civil war between the terrorist movement and the Lebanese Army. The rest have been held since the two week Army-terrorist collision of May, 1973, the sources said.

The terrorist controlled Falastin News Agency "Wafa" said the strike began on Sunday and that several prisoners were now in "rapidly deteriorating physical condition."

There was no immediate comment from the Lebanese Government.

The French-language Beirut newspaper "As-Safa" said the strikers demanded the formation of a joint Palestine Lebanese Commission under top terrorist leader Yasser Arafat to visit them in prison and ensure defence rights for them.

Kuwait sends 5 Rome airport killers to Cairo

CAIRO (UPI). — The five terrorists responsible for the December airport massacre arrived here yesterday, airport officials said.

The five have been under detention in Kuwait since they were turned over to the authorities there on December 18.

Thirty-one persons died in the December 18 airport massacre when terrorists threw five bombs on a Pan-Am Airliner awaiting take-off at the airport on December 18.

Terrorists then hijacked a West German Lufthansa airliner to Kuwait and then to Kuwait, killing their hostages along the way.

The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) said it would not before a terrorist court if it found another Arab country to accept them. The Cairo news agency "Al-Ahram" said yesterday that President Sadat had agreed to let officials bring them to Egypt.

Egyptian officials and the PLO said the five were taken after arriving in Cairo.

43 Mexican sailors believed drowned

MEXICO CITY (Reuters). — Forty-three Mexican sailors were yesterday feared to have died when a navy ship sank about 96 kms. from the Atlantic port of Veracruz.

Minesweepers and planes scoured the area but picked up only three survivors and four bodies, the Marine Ministry said.

The ship, a 1,400-ton tug, sank last Monday in rough seas after radioing that it had engine trouble.

South Vietnam's naval chief fired

SEOUL (AP). — President Chung Hee Park fired South Korea's chief of naval operations and his deputy yesterday because of the loss of at least 150 navy men in the sinking of a tugboat.

Those dismissed were Adm. Kim Kyu Sop and Rear Adm. Oh Yun Kyung.

The 120-ton tugboats capsized and sank last Friday off Chungmu, on the south coast, as it was ferrying 318 navy men back to their ship 700 yards off the harbour.

African states urged to expel Portuguese

PARIS (UPI). — President Ahmed Sekou Toure of Guinea, in an interview with "Afric-Africa" magazine, called on Black African states to unite militarily and expel Portugal from its African provinces.

"The African States each have an armed force," Sekou Toure said. "If we unite in declaring open war against Portuguese Fascism, we can break, in a short time, the entire colonial system installed by the Portuguese and liberate totally and forever Portuguese Guinea, Angola (Portuguese West Africa) and Mozambique (Portuguese East Africa)."

4 Turkish leftists get life sentences

ANKARA (AP). — A martial law court yesterday sentenced four leftists to death on charges of plotting to overthrow the government by force. The court immediately commuted the sentences to life imprisonment.

The court also meted out jail terms ranging between eight years to 10 months to 11 other defendants. Three were acquitted.

The court said death sentences were commuted to life terms because the defendants were all young, in their early 20s.

Rocket terrorists say they can't raise bail

By LISA BILLIG
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

ROME — Three Arabs granted provisional liberty on Wednesday after being convicted of illegal possession of Soviet-made missiles — which, it is believed, they planned to use to shoot down an El Al plane — can't raise their bail, their lawyer said yesterday.

Edmondo Zappacosta, who has represented the men since their arrest last September, filed notice of an appeal against the court's decision ordering the men to pay bail of $136,000 each.

"They just do not have this money," Dr. Zappacosta said.

The organizations, or countries, as yet anonymous which are expected to produce the "freedom money" will, by paying it, prove that the three men are considered of great importance to their sponsors.

Bonn, Tripoli seen expanding cooperation

By BRIAN AETHUR
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

BONN — Chancellor Willy Brandt spoke optimistically yesterday about the chances for expanded cooperation between West Germany and Libya.

Brandt, in a luncheon toast to visiting Libyan Premier Abdel Salam Jalloud, said their talks "have shown possibilities of expanding mutual relations based on common interests."

This was echoed after talks between the Libyan and Foreign Minister Walter Scheel when the Foreign Ministry said that, within the framework of European-Arab cooperation, there was "still much room" for bilateral relations.

Bonn has long been interested in improving ties with Libya, which is West Germany's biggest single supplier of oil, 25 million tons last year. The Libyans, in turn, are understood to want greater Bonn technical aid and experts to help build up their economy. Jalloud also met with Cabinet members in charge of economics and development aid.

He will visit industrial firms, including the Krupp Steel company in Essen, during the remainder of his stay here.

TRADE — An eight-member Saudi Arabian industrial and trade mission arrived in Tel Aviv yesterday for a nine-day visit to discuss cooperation.

WAR ON INFLATION SPLITS ROME CABINET

ROME (Reuters). — Italian Treasury Minister Ugo La Malfa resigned last night, plunging the country into a full-scale political crisis.

Political observers said it seemed certain that the four-party coalition, headed by Christian Democrat Mariano Rumor, would be forced to resign following the withdrawal of support by La Malfa, who is also leader of the Italian Republican Party.

La Malfa, 70, said in a resignation letter addressed to the Premier that he was quitting because of the bitter arguments generated by Italy's negotiation of a $1,200m. loan from the International Monetary Fund.

The four-party Cabinet is scheduled to meet today to discuss terms of the loan.

Observers said it seemed impossible that the Government — which took office in June last year — would be able to continue without the leader of the small but influential Republican Party.

It had been known for several months that La Malfa disagreed with his colleagues on several points of economic policy, but his move last night was unexpected. After widespread reports this week — generated mainly by Socialist Party fears of de-nationalization aspects in the IMF deal — it was thought that the danger point had been passed.

La Malfa had pressed for extensive cut-backs in government spending as a way of slowing Italy's runaway inflation. But Socialist Budget Minister Antonio Giarola favoured State subsidies to producers as a way of keeping prices down.

The Socialist Party was reportedly unhappy with terms of the IMF loan, which it feared could involve harsh de-nationalization measures boosting unemployment.

Messmer's reshuffle doesn't impress public

By JACK MAURICE
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

PARIS. — Premier Pierre Messmer is expected to announce the names of the members of his new cabinet sometime this morning, but there was little chance that any surprises would emerge from the new list, informed sources said yesterday.

Wednesday's attempt to dramatize the political scene, when Mr. Messmer resigned and was re-appointed six hours later, apparently left the French population at large totally indifferent, and even political circles did not see the move as making any particular impact on the domestic scene here.

The opposition, as expected, said

the manoeuvre was aimless, and added that "the new Pierre Messmer will certainly do no better than the old Pierre Messmer."

Among government supporters no comment was yet forthcoming as the plans within the Cabinet majority waited to see who would be evicted from which post in the new Cabinet. Foreign Minister Michel Jobert will definitely remain in, and he even continued to plan trips abroad just hours after the government of which he was a member had resigned.

Jobert is a long-time confidant of President Pompidou as well as being the energetic operator of his foreign policy, and there seemed no chance whatsoever that he would not continue to maintain his hold over the Quai d'Orsay.

The brilliant and fiercely ambitious Finance Minister, Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, has already told the press that he will also remain in the new Cabinet. Giscard d'Estaing did not, however, clarify whether he would remain in his present capacity and there was some cautious speculation that he would receive a less important post.

Giscard d'Estaing has been at odds with Messmer for weeks on how to combat France's spiralling prices. Circles close to Pompidou blame him for undermining government cohesion and authority.

There is no question of evicting Giscard from the Cabinet altogether, since he would possibly be a very dangerous opponent and critic of government policies if he acted independently outside of it.

Giscard, even if he is downgraded to the Social Affairs Ministry or another post at the same level, is satisfied at remaining in the government, since he is known to believe that it is easier to build one's image when working within the establishment than when acting as just another member in the ineffective opposition chorus.

One man whose name was on the "resignation list," according to informed sources, was Transport Minister Yves Guena, who has clashed recently with Messmer and whose handling of the Concorde affair was found below par by Pompidou.

The tough Interior Minister, Raymond Marcellin, was believed to be among the men retained by Messmer but it is widely believed that he will be given another post.

But whether Messmer's authority over his colleagues and his popularity among the population in general will gain from the recent moves yet remained to be seen.

Election setback for Indira Gandhi

NEW DELHI (AP). — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi suffered major reverses last night in a very important election for control of her home state's legislature.

There was no doubt that the Prime Minister's Congress Party would emerge as the largest single grouping in the 425-seat Uttar Pradesh Assembly.

But the Congress was in danger of losing its absolute majority, a situation that could force Mrs. Gandhi to seek the support of the pro-Moscow Communists or some independents, to enable the party to form a government in India's largest state.

With 370 results declared, the Congress had 182 seats and needed to win 31 of the remaining 55 seats for a majority.

The next largest party was the Bharatiya Karanti Dal, a breakaway Congress group, with 98 seats, followed by the Hindu Nationalist Jan Sangh, with 50, and the pro-Moscow Communists with 13.

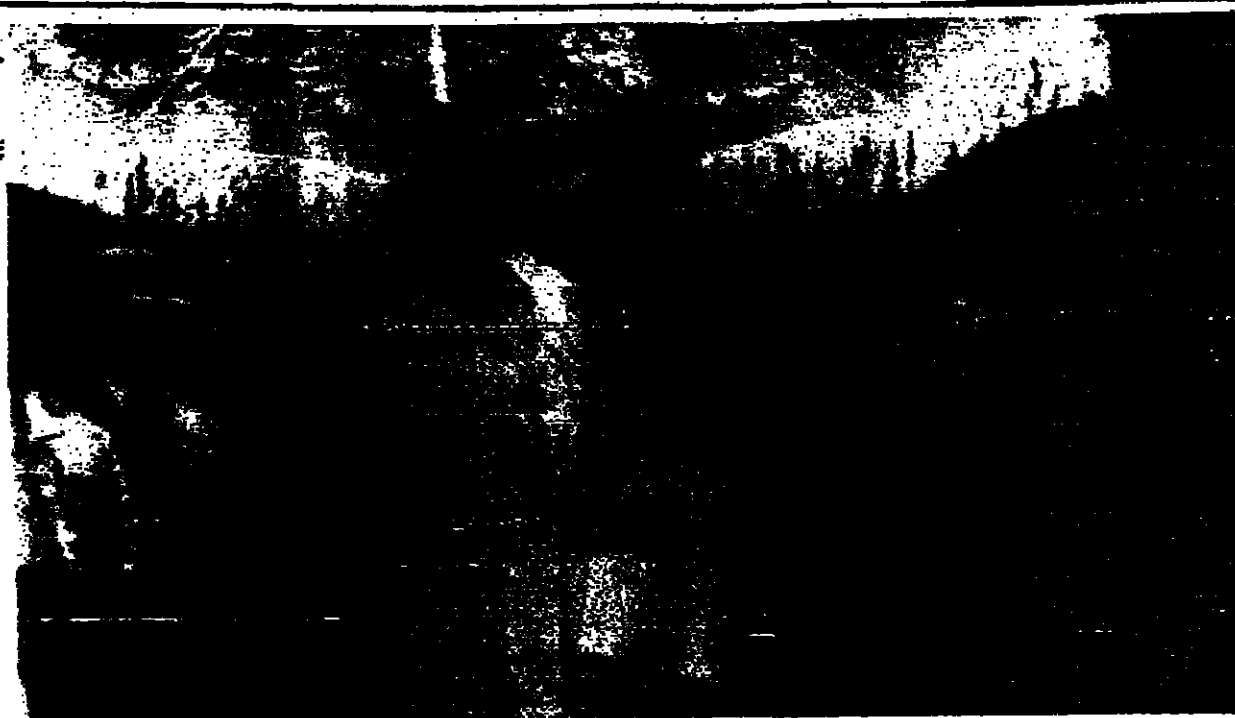

Vietcong fails in bid to enter Geneva parley

GENEVA (AP). — The Vietcong's provisional revolutionary government last night narrowly lost in its bid to win admission to the 108-nation diplomatic conference updating the Geneva conventions.

A resolution calling for the Vietcong's participation, which was backed by all Communist and several non-aligned countries, was defeated 23-37 in a roll call vote.

Thirty-three nations abstained. The vote came after a three-hour debate in which the U.S. delegate, George H. Aldrich, urged the conference members to have "the courage and the good sense" to oppose the admission of "this shadow organization."

THE EMPEROR ADDRESSES HIS TROOPS. Haile Selassie tells his mutinous army in Addis Ababa yesterday that he has raised their pay. (AP radiophoto)

Ethiopian troops win pay rise — if money can be found

ADDIS ABABA (UPI). — Emperor Haile Selassie yesterday named a new partial cabinet and announced pay rises for the armed forces in an effort to quell a military revolt throughout his kingdom.

There was an initial favourable reaction from the dissident troops who were, in effect, in charge of the entire country.

The revolt was sparked on Tuesday by military demands for extra pay which were later expanded to include dismissal of the cabinet, which consequently resigned on Wednesday night.

Haile Selassie yesterday named Endachew Mekonen, an aristocrat and Minister of Communications in the outgoing cabinet, as Prime Minister, and two army officers as Army Commander and Interior Minister. Other portfolios will be announced later.

The official communique also said the basic pay of privates will be increased effective immediately from $2100 to $2112 (IL240 — IL270) monthly and other non-commissioned ranks to $2150 (IL360). With new fringe benefits a private's pay will be nearer IL360, military observers said, which was the original key demand.

There was no immediate indication if the armed forces would accept the new conditions, though one leaflet distributed later said that at least one army unit would accept. Some diplomats suggested the insurrection may have spread too far to stop immediately.

Battle troops with machineguns and rifles moved into Addis Ababa yesterday and surrounded key buildings — banks, the post office, communications facilities. Others set up road blocks on the outskirts of the city. Armoured personnel carriers and helicopters took over the airport which was briefly closed and then reopened.

An 8 p.m. curfew was announced. A ministerial meeting of the 41-nation Organization of African Unity was cancelled in mid-session, but otherwise life continued normally in the capital.

An army helicopter sprayed the city with thousands of leaflets throughout the day. The first leaflets praised the Emperor for getting rid of an unpopular and "corrupt" cabinet, but insisted that troops in the capital would not move to fight rebel soldiers in Asmara in the north.

The second text said the former cabinet ministers must "now be brought to account," and diplomatic sources said they would not be allowed to leave the country.

The leaflet further said any wealth transferred overseas must be returned, land and property must be distributed among the poor, and high-level appointments approved "by the people."

In the north, soldiers from the elite Second Division continued to hold Asmara, and troops and sailors were in charge of Massawa, Ethiopia's principal naval port, on the Red Sea.

Diplomatic sources said the Government will have difficulty in meeting the new wage bill. Military expenditures already account for 35 per cent of the budget of this very poor country.

"I just don't know where they are going to get the extra money from," one military observer said. "They've already lost budgeted revenue when they reduced petroleum prices."

This was a reference to disturbances in Addis Ababa last week following an increase in petroleum prices. The Government was forced to grant concessions and reduce the prices.

'Guernica' sprayed with red

NEW YORK (AP). — A man who said he was an artist wanting to "tell the truth" sprayed red paint across the famed "Guernica" painting by Pablo Picasso at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City yesterday.

The alleged vandal was apprehended by museum officials and taken into police custody within minutes. He was named by police as Tony Shafrazi, 25, holder of an Iranian passport.

He is said to have written "Kill lies all."

Museum personnel began removing the paint from the large mural immediately. It was reported that the painting was undamaged.

The gallery containing "Guernica," whose subject is the ravages of the Spanish Civil War, was closed after the vandalism.

Composer Berio stretches limits of tradition

By YOHANAN BOEHM

There is little personal information available about composer Luciano Berio, one of the leading names in contemporary music, and he himself is reticent on the subject. But he is extremely articulate when a musical subject is under discussion.

Born in 1925 into a family of musicians in Oneglia in Italy, he studied composition, piano and conducting at the Verdi Conservatoire in Milan — he considers the prizes he won as too unimportant to be mentioned. With Bruno Maderna, he was a co-founder of Milan Radio's Studio for Electronic Music. In 1963, he went to the United States where he taught at the Juilliard School for seven years. He has been living in Rome for the past two years, but travels extensively conducting mainly his own compositions. His newest interest is the establishment, together with Pierre Boulez and Vinko Globokar, of a new kind of music institute in Paris. Financed by the French Government, the institute will devote itself to the production of electronic and computer music, as well as research into the physiology of the human voice and the psychological and sociological aspects of music in general.

Precise composer

Berio himself is very precise in his compositions, and the notation of his scores is clear. He writes the most impressive music within the scope of ordinary instruments, though he stretches the limits of tradition beyond the customary.

When discussing his own music, Mr. Berio gives his explanations in dry and technical language. It is his wife, Cathy Berberian, who interpolates explanations of its emotional content.

Cathy Berberian, the eminent singer, is a born New Yorker of pure Armenian stock. She is proud of her heritage and finds many similarities between her people and the Jews. She began to study piano, dance and acting at an early age, but her parents did not encourage her ambitions for a professional career. When she eventually took up singing, she began by playing records of great artists and singing along with them. Strangely enough, most of them were basses and Miss Berberian still thinks that her extraordinarily wide-ranged voice (more than three octaves) owes its rich low register to this unorthodox training. It was only when she went to Milan that she began to study vocal technique.

Shocked wife

When Cathy met and married Luciano Berio, she was at first shocked by his "modern" music. He taught her to understand it by playing her a record of excerpts from Berg's "Wozzeck". Slowly, with repeated hearing, she began to understand and finally to love this kind of music and today she is the unchallenged queen of its interpretation. For example, might well be followed by all who are afraid of unaccompanied music.

The programmes to be given by the Berios in three concerts with the Israel Chamber Ensemble (tomorrow night at the Jerusalem Theatre; on Sunday at Haifa's Shavit Hall; and on Monday at the Tel Aviv Museum) consist of three works by Berio and five small Muhaud symphonies.

Berio has written 11 "Sequences on Epiphany" (Epiphany not in the religious sense but used as a synonym for "apparition").

The two "Sequences" chosen for this programme are based on James Joyce ("Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man") and Antonio Machado, a living Spanish poet. Written in 1959-61, the complete work would last about forty minutes.

No dynamics

In "Sequences," written for Cathy Berberian in 1965 on Swiss writer Markus Kutter, no dynamics are given. Instead, adjectives are employed to describe the desired emotional effect, which, of course, indicate appropriate dynamics to the singer. Several short phrases from a poem are continuously permuted thus giving the "Sequences" their name. Finally, "Folk Songs" (1964) is an anthology of some folk tunes — American, Armenian, French, Sicilian, Sardinian, Italian, Auvergnais, and Azerbaïdjan linked by instrumental interludes.

There can be no better examples of serious artists dedicated to the creation and interpretation of "modern" music than Luciano Berio and Cathy Berberian. They do not live in an ivory tower and are very human. They are also the youngest looking grandparents I know.

Both, incidentally, were highly appreciative of the medical attention provided for Mr. Berio when shoulder-pains hampered his working schedule.

So, don't be afraid of contemporary music. Luciano Berio's music performed by Cathy Berberian will provide you with a memorable experience.

A SINGER SHOULDN'T TAKE THE BATON

REGRETTABLY it is the fashion of the day for great instrumentalists to turn to conducting, often with mediocre results. Now Fischer-Dieskau the world-famous singer has taken to wielding the baton. But even this great artist who is a fine musician, a thinker and a remarkable writer on music, is not a great conductor.

For his debut with the IPO (Tel Aviv, Mann Auditorium, Feb. 21), Fischer-Dieskau chose two romantic symphonies: Schubert's B flat

Major No. 5 and Schumann's No. 3, the "Rhenish". Both were disappointing. To cover up for his lack of conducting technique, Fischer-Dieskau tries not to miss even the smallest detail. But there was no clear conception and no organic flow of ideas, and occasionally he had difficulty in keeping the orchestra together. All through the four movements of Schubert there was a surprising monotony in dynamics and in expression; even the strings did not sing. Fischer-Dies-kau's musicality broke through only in the Trio of the Menuetto.

The Schumann was not very different. The first movement was lively, but the rest seemed more like the putting together of separate phrases, rather than a symphonic construction, capable of creating an impact.

The soloist was Alfred Brendel in Mozart's C Major piano concerto.

Beach is clean and air is clean, but noisy

WAR PASSED EILAT BY

By HELGA DUDMAN

Jerusalem Post Reporter

OVERHEARD on an Arkia plane on the flight back to Tel Aviv, successful young executive to two similar friends: "A holiday in Eilat right now is a real pleasure — certainly more than going to Europe."

After spending a few days in Eilat (to see a friend — and without a word from or to the Municipality or the Ministry of Tourism) I can report that never has the place seemed so pleasant. Never has the reality been so much better than the reputation: the beach has never been so clean, the service so good, the general atmosphere so beguiling. (And don't forget that if you fly down, you have all the pleasures of a trip abroad, complete with security checks — your luggage is opened and there are separate frisking booths for men and women. So why bother with all that snobbish extra expense in time and money?)

The first thing I heard, in one form or another, from the first five Eilatians I met, was: Why did they show that terrible television programme about us? What was the point? It didn't give a true picture, and if journalists want to "expose" problems, aren't there plenty of better ones around?

It is my good fortune to live without TV, but even without seeing the programme, I arrived expecting to find a fairly dead resort town. To my amazement, the hotel at which I stayed — the Neptune — turned out to be positively swinging. A large group of Belgians made the lobby and dining-room ring with French; there were quite a few honeymooners (I did not manage, incidentally, to catch a single one talking to his or her mate, whatever this may indicate), and at the weekend, an influx of Israelis brought the occupancy rate up to nearly 70 percent. (The Neptune's average rate since December has been around 40 per cent. Even in November the figure was 20 per cent — practically all soldiers.)

Few casualties

But before statistics, the mood — for this is the most remarkable gold in the air. "The war passed this town by," one Eilatite told me. And that, for somebody coming from the gloomy north, is the real holiday. With one exception (obviously, there must be a few more) I found nobody interested in the news, in "Who is a Jew," in coalition developments. Eilat has always been a never-never land, which makes for its own problems; but these days the contrast is worth the increase in the price of transportation.

One reason for the lack of depression can be found in Eilat's incredibly small casualty list; the figure I heard, for deaths in the war, was six. This is partly due to the fact that the town's reserve units serve in the surrounding area, where there was, of course, no shooting. At the same time, nearly everybody seems to be in uniform (practically all the citizens are of military age), and you may see a young man strolling around in fatigues mornings, but serving as bartender evenings. Everybody is young, including the managers of the top hotels, who were all called up by the army; the most senior manager, I was told, is a captain in Hagat.

Of course tourism is down. And of course there are problems for the town's two other main employers, the port and the Thoma mines; but wages continue to be paid and the worries belong to the government. "Eilat has probably suffered much less, economically, as a result of the war, than most Israeli cities," a teacher at the high school told me.

"I've been working steadily with foreign tourists," George, the silver-haired, blue-eyed "Dean of Eilat Guides" told me, "and I'm certainly not the only one. This is always a slow time. Don't forget that February is usually the time for individuals from abroad, and not for groups."

At Azorit, the attractive jewellery workshop and display centre, where I expected to see the darkness far outweighing the light, the situation was put into nice perspective by Haim Miller. "You see that not all the Eilat lights are on? I do have to save money," he said. "But they aren't all off either. Exactly half are lit." Nor was the silver and Negev-stone jewellery going unseen, as a pessimist like myself might have expected. Two honeymoon couples were examining pins and necklaces, and other customers were considering purchases in European-accented English.

THE inviting state of the beach may be due partly to the absence of throngs, and partly to the efforts of the Municipality, which has set signs on the sand reading "Pitching tents forbidden." This Peasach, I was told, the beach is to be free of those thousands of littering structures — and by edict, not because anybody will wish to.

There are, however, no signs reading "Metal bed-frames forbidden," and here and there hippies do lounge about on them, or on mattresses or sleeping bags. I do not know whether it is because sandy beaches and tattered jeans are now so much part of life everywhere, but even the hippies seem cleaner than they once were. Or perhaps I am prejudiced in their favour, because practically all those I saw were either sleeping or reading, two of life's better occupations, while the meticulously groomed guests at the luxury hotels tended to be playing cards.

In the sign-and-fashion department, Eilat remains as hilarious as ever. The English version of the notice to the airport (now also temporary quarters of the Tour Ministry) reads, "Entrance to minimal without shirt — Forbid The Hebrew original is perfectly specific, Eilat's being what are, it reads, "Entrance with naked Body Forbidden."

If the beach is clean, and the air smells clean — which does — it does not, unfortunately, sound clean. This is because super-kiosks, immortalized in crete, stand out uninterrupted of music over competing loudspeakers from early morning. The come up to the hotel balconies there is nothing you can do except to go deaf, as the owners, presumably long since the noise usually starts, there is a soul at the beach, on those who cannot live with music to drown out their trans arrive with their own trans rarely reach the hotels.

If the Municipality wants its bit to discomfort the guests, it can continue to take action. In their present series advertisements, Eilat's hotels miss "peace and tranquillity," deliver it, too — except for loudspeakers. And if the hotels were really serious about their claims of privacy and peace, they would put the evil eye something, on these noise-makers.

The only visible air-pollution puffs merrily away in good-bour Akaba; a phosphate plant was told. On our side of the five enormous tankers were empty and idle close in to long since part of the scene, costing $40,000 each per day of idleness, I was told. But that does seem much compared to the lions at the "Lagoon," Levi paid for "The Lagoon," which is eleven kilometres of "sea" and stands as an eternal monument to "expert planning" and the ing-around of the environment. Panes lanterns on the t fuelled by olive oil, would make nice fairyland touch. Little boats flutter around the state tankers, propelled by that red oil source of energy, a breeze.

(But irrevocable damage to lat's coral reefs from oil pollution goes right on, even though it means from hotel balconies, month, according to the Nature serve Authority five serious of pollution "made the site worse than ever; Mr. Abraham of the Authority, sent a strowed cable to Transport Minister Pines protesting against intellectual control of oil spill.

DISSENGAGEMENT love here another item for the liter on the pleasant ways in Egyptian and Israeli soldiers' leage of each other. Eilat's driver, Number Seven, who is a tourist guide, had just returned from "Africa" when I met him. of the Egyptian soldiers we talking to turned out to be a guide, just like me. So I him all about our attractions and he told me about what is to see in Cairo. We'd like to each other around some day. I've already invited him to Crete (a new restaurant now built which will specialize in tian cuisine, with cooks from au Prince).

World Bank Atlas shows disparity in incomes

WASHINGTON (UPI). — The World Bank has published the 8th edition of its Atlas, a glimpse at population and economic growth. The 15 page statistical index, published on Sunday, included the warning that the data might be based on "incomplete and unreliable figures. In addition, the Bank warned, "they reveal little about the absolute state of poverty in the developing world, and nothing about its distribution within each country."

The Bank noted that although real growth continues in the developing countries, "disparities in per capita income between rich and poor countries continue to increase."

The base year for the data is 1971. At the time it showed the annual per capita income in Israel ($3,190) recipient of sizeable amounts of U.S. foreign aid) was greater than the per capita income in Japan or Italy, ordinarily considered developed countries which give aid.

The Atlas estimated the population of the People's Republic of China was the biggest in the world at 787,180,000, with a growth rate of 1.8 per cent during the 1965-71 period. India's population was estimated at 551,123,000, with a growth rate of 2.2 per cent.

The richest country in the world, uncontested, was the United States with a Gross National Product rated at $5,160 and growing during the 1965-71 period at 1.9 per cent.

Sweden trailed with a per capita output of $4,240 but a 3 per cent growth rate annually for the 1965-71 period. Canada was within $100 of Sweden and growing faster (3.4 per cent).

According to the Atlas data, several nations experienced shrinking economies: Jordan, Ghana, Senegal, South Vietnam, Cambodia, People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, Sudan, Haiti, Niger, Cuba and Bangladesh.

Population growth rates for the 1965-71 period were paced by El Salvador, which had 3,679,000 residents in 1971, and a growth rate of 3.9 per cent annually. No country showed a negative population growth, but East Germany had a zero growth.

In economic growth, some of the most striking gains were made in the Communist bloc. Twenty-three countries posted average annual growth rates of five per cent or better during the 1965-71 period. Japan, Singapore, and South Korea exceeded 10 per cent.

Among others with five per cent or better growth in per capita GNP were Israel, Libya, Saudi Arabia and Iran.

UN drug warning

GENEVA (Reuters). — The U.N. warned yesterday that drug-taking throughout the world was continuing unabated, that it could become more common and that government measures were often insufficient to control it.

In its annual report the U.N.'s 11-member Narcotics Control Board said that despite greater international cooperation among governments on consumption of heroin and psychotropic substances such as LSD, there had also been no apparent reduction in widespread illicit trafficking in cannabis and cocaine.

150,000 IBM cards result in concordance with a difference

By LILI BAT AHABON
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

BRUSSELS. — A NEW Bible Concordance, prepared with the aid of a computer, is shortly to be published. The work, by Father Georges Passelecq, a Belgian Benedictine monk from the mountain abbey of Maredsous, was begun in 1958. Today, 15 years and 150,000 IBM cards later, the result is a concordance with a difference.

Father Passelecq, a man of medium height and lofty ideals, is known for his erudition, his sense of humor, his love of Israel. What prompted him to launch such a long-range, painstaking undertaking?

In an exclusive interview with The Jerusalem Post, he gives his answer: "The Bible, which is the Word of God, is used by the faithful of the Jewish and Christian religions alike as a source of prayer and meditation. But it is also a reference work used by scholars the world over who study theology, philosophy, ethics, ancient literature, history and sociology. I wanted to create a tool to lighten their labors. In addition, the idea is to make the Bible easily accessible not only to scholars, but to all who use it."

And with a twinkle in his eye, the Father, who looks younger than his 64 years, adds, "This big fat baby will make its debut around Pesach."

The "baby," a kind of conceptual dictionary of the Bible, is in French, Father Passelecq's mother tongue. He masters six other languages: English, Dutch, German, Latin, Greek and Hebrew. The big difference between this work and other concordances, apart from the unusual methods used here, lies in the fact that it deals not only with words, but also with concepts.

While other concordances list the passages in which a certain word from the Biblical text is used, the new work also contains references to ideas and particular subjects. For example, a reader looking up the word "crime" in a concordance like, say, Cruden's will find four listings referring to the word in the Biblical text: 1. Job 31:11 — "this is a heinous crime, yea, it is an iniquity"; 2. Ezekiel 7:23 — "for the land is full of bloody crime," and two others from the New Testament. But the reader need not be a criminologist or a Bible scholar to know that these do not cover all the cases of crime occurring in the Good Book. In Father Passelecq's new conceptual concordance, references can be found to the classical crimes described in the Bible where the text does not contain the actual word "crime," such as: the murder of Abel, the rape of Tamar, and the killing of Uriah the Hittite.

By 1968, ten years after he began his herculean task, Father Passelecq had noted his research information on 80,000 index cards. At this point, the idea of using a computer entered the stage. Fathers Ferdinand Paswick and Eric de Serchgrave from the nearby Benedictine monastery of Quevy took courses in computer programming and arranged to use — after hours, and on holidays — the IBM 370 computer of the Caisse Generale d'Epargne et de Retraite (CGER), a savings bank organized by the Belgian government. Three nuns joined the small staff, transferring the material to punched cards. Each of the some 9,000 "key words" in this scholarly work is listed together with synonyms and analogies aimed to help the student of the Bible to get, at a glance, a more complete picture of his subject at hand.

The land of the Bible and its people have always been close to Father Georges' heart. This, together with his profound humanism, led him during the Nazi era to become an active member of the underground. He helped Jews who had earlier fled from the Nazis and were being rounded up in Belgium by German occupying forces. Himself arrested in 1941, Father Passelecq spent the war in Nazi prisons, including almost a year in Dachau. This only strengthened his devotion to the Jewish people and his determination to be on the side of right.

As a committed Christian, and living by the precept that deeds are as important as words, Georges Passelecq is now active in Belgian interfaith programmes. He is particularly concerned with all political actions for Israel.

Shortly after the October War, the Belgian Catholic Commission on Christian-Jewish Relations, of which he is secretary, published a statement in which the signatories declare and affirm their tie with the Jewish people and their understanding of the feeling of the Jewish people for its land. "We want peace at any price — unless justice is jeopardized," the declaration said in part. As none of the Belgian newspapers published the statement, the Commission printed it in large numbers and distributed it to religious and political leaders in the country.

More often than not seen in ordinary clothes rather than in his brown monk's robe, Father Passelecq spends his only about half his time on the grounds of his monastery, which he calls "my kibbutz without women." When he is there, he studies, writes and preaches. His most recent sermon, like so many others in the past, dealt with the political situation in the Middle East. He called it — "Peace — do it yourself."

When he is not in Maredsous, the monastery known for its excellent cheese and weekend "retreats," he travels around to bring his message beyond its walls. Audiences both in Europe and in the United States listen to him lecture in church and synagogue on his favorite topics: Judaism and Israel. And he invariably takes leave of his Israeli friends with the words, "Am Yisrael Hai!"

His affinity to Jewish thought has led Father Passelecq to undertake several translations from English into French of the writings of Jewish theologians and philosophers. He has translated Solomon Schechter's "Major Concepts of the Talmud" as well as "God in Search of Man" and "A Call for Truth" by Abraham J. Heschel.

His passion for the Bible and his desire to make it available to the masses was responsible for the Maredsous Bible, his first written achievement upon regaining freedom from Nazi prisons. Translated by him into French from the Hebrew and the Greek, the Maredsous Bible was a decided improvement on earlier French versions, which used formal, stilted language and bore little resemblance to the reach of ordinary folk. Popular in price and words, the Maredsous Bible, published in 1951, has to date sold more than 700,000 copies.

In order to be complete, the Concordance, which is his latest and most ambitious work, would have had to contain about one million quotations across 5,000 pages and would, by reason of price, have had to become the exclusive domain of the wealthy specialist. However, stressed the lively Father, the idea was to make a popular work available to all sections of the population.

The college-dictionary-sized volume contains 1,250 pages with some 150,000 Biblical references. Published by P. Lethielleux, of Paris, the book will sell at the special price of 1,350 Belgian francs (IL35) during an introductory offer period till April 30, and then go on sale at its regular price of 1,530 francs (IL150).

and subjected them to the fire. What right have Christians now to demand Jewish conformity to a Christian-imposed image of continued pain, martyrdom, or deprivation?" Boyd said he does not consider Berrigan to be a personal anti-Semite. "But social and theological anti-Semitism, whether it is consciously held or not, is a far greater danger in terms of world opinion. Father Berrigan's views are omitted in an explosive international atmosphere. And the fact that an internationally prominent Catholic should make such public comments inevitably has widespread ramifications."

No recognition

"The Second Vatican Council succeeded in absorbing Jews directly responsible for the death of Christ, but the Vatican did not recognize the State of Israel. It is dangerous to treat the Berrigan statement as if it were made in a vacuum."

Father Boyd rebuked Berrigan for claiming that the experience of the State of Israel represents an "imperial adventure."

"Thirteen million Jews are still alive in the world today," Boyd said.

"Of these, nearly 3,000,000 live in Israel, the Jewish homeland. The rest are scattered. It is surely understandable that all Jews, remembering the death of 6,000,000 in the Holocaust, are extraordinarily sensitive concerning the question of Israel's security. There is no 'imperial adventure,' as Father Berrigan could learn if he visited here. But he's never been to Israel."

He should have come here before he made his comments," Boyd said. "I would like to take him through Yad Vashem."

"Past Jewish experience has led Jews toward a new self-strength. Father Berrigan is grievously wrong when he mistakes a determination not to be sacrificed lamb-like inside a gas chamber for imperialism."

To Berrigan's assertion that "the State of Israel had become the repository, and finally the tomb, of the Jewish soul," Boyd commented: "I have found in Israel a glistering resurrection of the Jewish soul following the harsh torture and death of the Holocaust."

Father Boyd also criticized Berrigan for following "radical-chic," and for his tendency to romanticize the Third World.

In response to Berrigan's charge that Christians supporting Israel are acting out of guilt feelings towards the Jews, Boyd said:

"Guilt is not the motivating factor that Father Berrigan simplistically and erroneously finds it to be. Affirmation of life is the factor. Instead, Christian support of Israel is rooted in the awareness of inter-relatedness."

In reply to Berrigan's assertion that "there exists a common assumption that Israel is exempt from moral criticism," Boyd said: "Clearly, this is not so, either inside Israel or outside of it. Inside Israel, I have found a 'ceaselessly self-critical society.' I encountered outspoken criticism of every facet of Israeli life from Arab and Jew alike. So I find an element of irresponsibility in the stanning and overt sensationalism of Father Berrigan's remarks."

Non-violence?

"And the violence of Father Berrigan's rhetoric calls into serious question his stance as an apostle of non-violence," Boyd continued. "The time has come when we need to recognize that we hold a distorted picture of prophets — an exploitative theology recognizes only an enraged Christ of popular, cinematic revolutionary trappings. This serves to stereotype prophets as being angry or polemical men who blow up the peace, instead of reconciling people."

Father Boyd is the author of numerous books, including the international best-seller "Are You Running With Me, Jesus?" He is an Associate Fellow at Yale University, and Boston University recently established a permanent collection of his papers. He recently collaborated with Pulitzer Prize-winner Paul Conrad on a new book, "When in the Course of Human Events."

Father Boyd will be speaking in several U.S. cities under the auspices of the American Jewish Committee federations of churches, and possibly Catholic dioceses on the subject of Israel and on the question of Jewish-Christian relations.

WHAT BERRIGAN SAID

Nixon. And I am a Jew, in resistance against Israel," he said. To Berrigan, Israel has employed the racist ideology of the Nazis and "fostered the myth of the barbarian Arab," while at the same time victimizing Oriental Jews, and creating one and a half million Arab refugees.

Though he conceded Israel's right to exist, Berrigan said "she has not abolished poverty and misery; rather, she manufactures human waste, the by-product of her entrepreneurs, her military-industrial complex."

Berrigan's speech was later carried in "American Report," the journal of Clergy and Laity Concerned, which also published a rebuttal by Rabbi Arthur Hertzberg, President of the American Jewish Congress. Noting that Berrigan had never been to Israel, Rabbi Hertzberg accused him of "many errors of emphasis and fact," and concluded: "Let us call all this by its right name — old-fashioned theological anti-Semitism."

Several Jewish journalists, also associated with the protest movement of the 'sixties, hit back at Berrigan's inflammatory speech. Nat Hentoff, commenting on the Himmeler-like phrase "Israel manufactures human waste," suggested: "Next time, let the Catholics get him out of jail." (Both Daniel Berrigan and his brother Phillip, also a Jesuit activist, were helped by Jewish fund-raisers and by Jewish lawyers.)

Paul Cowan, in a "Village Voice" interview with Berrigan last month, asked him what sources he used to interpret the situation in the Middle East. Berrigan answered: "I'm not very systematic in my reading... New Left literature and left Catholic literature... I read Arthur Wasserman's stuff... Paul Jacobs sent me his thing from Ramparts... 'Peace News'... and I think the Arab groups sent me some position papers."

Equal suffering?

Berrigan seems to have reached an "understanding" of the Holocaust which equates his own pain and martyrdom at the hands of American "fascists" with the suffering of a Nazi victim.

In 1967, when protests against the Vietnam war began to receive wider support, Berrigan addressed the students at Cornell University. During the question period, he was asked whether he and the eight other war protesters (who had entered the Cantonsville, Md., draft-board office and poured animal blood in the files) had considered the possibility that some harm might come to one of the terrified women clerks.

"Yes, we gave that grateful consideration," he said. "But we decided the protest was so important that we had to run that risk... Besides, anyone who works for the draft board deserves no more consideration than the guards at Belsen and Dachau."

A Jewish professor — a refugee from Nazi Germany — followed Berrigan to the speakers' podium and said: "That remark is either blasphemous or you are a fool."

Who's afraid of American cars? HOW TO BREAK THE FEAR BARRIER

Second in a series by ODED SIDON

"People who have got used to driving American cars will find it hard to give them up, and those who have dreamed for years of buying an American car will not be willing to leaving the buying in the realm of dreams." This was the opinion recently offered by a well known American psychologist, when asked about the likely repercussions of the energy crisis on sales of local and foreign cars.

It is no secret that the American car has served as a status symbol. This car, the external and internal appearance of which gladdens the eye, has been bought outside the U.S.A. by various groups who have wished to demonstrate their status. In the course of time, the American car has ceased to be a status symbol. Purchasers of these cars now include industrial and commercial companies, and also people working in various professions, who have to make more or less long journeys. It is being increasingly realized that driving and riding in an American car is not tiring — you reach your destination fresh, and ready for business.

The entry of used American cars into the transport scene has, over a period, naturally enlarged the number of drivers of compacts, and it is now possible to find drivers of American cars among those with average salaries.

In Israel, the acceptance of the American car has been a slow but continuous process. The main reason for this is to be found in Israeli taxing policy, which has produced a big difference between the "heavy" American cars — heavy because of the materials used in their manufacture — and European cars. This policy has been changed only recently, and there are now no big differences between the prices of certain models of American cars and upper echelon European cars.

There is no doubt that, during the fifties, the assembly of compacts in Israel by Ilin Industries contributed to the acceptance of the concept of American car travel — travel in cars which are not "punished" by the march of time. Younger people who had not considered buying an American car began to buy them "wholesale," and demand expanded to absorb all cars available.

Local assembly did, of course, enable us to keep our imports in check. Public companies, Zahal, the Government and private companies began to buy American cars, not just for those in the managing director class, but also for senior executives and senior officers in Zahal.

It became increasingly clear that it was not only ministers and deputy ministers who require rugged cars, capable of covering hundreds of kilometres every day, without strain — those who work with ministers also require such cars.

At the beginning of the October War, there were plenty of compacts of various types available on the Israeli market. There was no lack of buyers for these cars. Buyers sought them out from dealers, and also from private owners. Many owners of compacts were asked if they wanted to sell. Used car dealers reported that such cars were usually snapped up. Those who snapped them up were people who know how to appreciate a good car, who know what lies under the smart exterior, and how to put the qualities of such a car to good use.

During the War, everyone became aware of the worth of these cars. In the neighbourhood of the front lines they were taken over roads which were really churned up, and on "missions" which deserve a place in the annals of Zahal.

The emergency situation arising after the War produced a temporary drop in sales of such cars. An Israeli sociologist who was asked about this by a journalist replied, "Anyone who thinks the explanation is connected with the rise in the price of petrol is seriously mistaken. There is no gainsaying that the increase in petrol prices is having an effect, and that it constitutes a financial burden. It seems to me, however, that some kind of fear barrier exists, which is felt in various fields and by various products. The car is one of the clearer examples of this phenomenon."

The sociologist's answer: "If at the present time, someone buys, say, a stereo set for which he pays a good price, the fact is known only to his family and friends. He does not have to expose his purchase to the eyes of the general public. The situation is different when he buys a new car; this is seen by all and sundry, including the neighbours. The potential buyer now has to ask himself, 'Am I sure I'm doing the right thing; can I break the fear barrier, or should I take account of public opinion?'

And if we are considering public opinion, it is no secret that, in the last fortnight, a distinct revival has been felt in product demand, this being a reflection of the expectation of devaluation, which would result in general price increases. These people are buying items which they feel they need. The items referred to are, in the main, replacements — not items being bought for the first time: the replacement of a refrigerator, TV set, washing machine, dish washer, vacuum cleaner, etc. The question arises: Why is it that the replacement of household items in the present period, irrespective of price, is quite natural, and causes the purchaser no twinges of conscience, while to change your car, an item which is essential to you, produces whispers in every corner? The answer has recently been provided by a well known Tel Aviv psychologist: The purchase of a car has become impossible for certain sections of the public, as a result of the extremely steep rise in the cost of running it, and this naturally produces frustration. The sight of a private car is thus an aggravation, and the sleeker the car, the greater the aggravation.

It may sound strange, but this question is also affected by the problems of public transport. Every day, thousands of people have to wait long periods in all weather at bus stops, while streams of private cars go by, in front of their eyes. Even if many drivers stopped to pick people up, there would not be room for everybody. It is not surprising therefore, that unfriendly remarks have been voiced, and have occasionally appeared in the press. Drivers of American cars formed a natural target, because of the elegant appearance of their cars. The fear barrier around the act of buying such cars has not proved an unbreachable barrier. It remained intact only a very short time.

During recent weeks, a noteworthy and increasing upsurge has been felt in sales of new American cars. If the importers were worried for a short period, as a result of the temporary drop in sales, their euphoria is now marked. In this connection, one of the importers has explained: "I was not worried. I felt that when the separation of forces agreement was signed, there would be a re-awakening, and it seems I was right. I believe that, when a new government is formed, and their is a stabilization of the political situation, this re-awakening will be even more marked. It may take a little while until we return to the position that existed before the October War, but there are already grounds for optimism."

Another importer said, "It must be admitted that, at the present time, there is a spirit of retrenchment in public and government circles, and this has affected private individuals. However, people have decided fairly quickly that buying an American car does not constitute extravagance, but rather the contrary. Anyone willing to work things out accurately will find that, despite the apparent higher increase in the cost of running an American car, compared with the costs for a European car, as a long term proposition, an American car is the best possible investment." Of course, if there is a devaluation, some institutions and individuals now hanging fire, for one reason or another, over the buying of an American car, will be kicking themselves over the price increase resulting from the devaluation, just as those who have been quicker off the mark will be congratulating themselves.

The only problem is, of course, the overcoming of the fear barrier. The number of people overcoming this barrier is increasing, since more and more people are coming to the conclusion that there is no need to be afraid of the American car. It may insist on its ration of petrol, but certainly does not "swallow" its owner. The general public has also come to terms with these new cars, and today is not put out by them.

We may quote a well-known economist: "Were I asked, what is the best investment today? I would answer, an American car." It would well be that he meant it.

A GUIDE FOR THE PERPLEXED

Perplexed is rather a mild word describing the feelings of apartment purchasers in Israel, after going through the gamut of finding an apartment with suitable location, size, view, construction quality, and adequate facilities. A much stronger adjective is for those who are accustomed to the housing accommodation of the western countries, and seek comparable living quarters in Israel. Builders here are simply not accustomed to the type of construction that is prevalent in many countries abroad; generally speaking, rooms are smaller, hardware and fixtures of cheaper material, and experienced craftsmen are not as readily available. Add to this the problems involved in dealing with builders, the language barrier, legal technicalities, different rules and customs; it it any wonder that many find the task distasteful — well nigh insurmountable?

Apartment seekers in Netanya have it easier, however, now that MAROT-NOF CONTRACTING CO. is beginning construction on Gal-Ram House, on Netanya's elegant south sea shore. These Canadian-American Builders have a world of experience behind them having built western-oriented apartments in Jerusalem and Petah Tikva, before commencing operations in Netanya. Gal-Ram House is being constructed of the finest materials and finishes available and will have a direct view of the sea. Apartments are superbly designed, containing the largest rooms in the city. Walk-in closets, two bathrooms, imported fixtures, and many other features offer an attractive package to the discriminating purchaser.

A builder who understands your needs, is anxious to please, and talks your language is a further inducement. Furthermore, the Anglo-Saxon Real Estate people (Tel. 053-28390), largest in Israel, will help you through all the procedures, from the initial contact with the builder, to the final registration. When you move in, they will take over the management — no maintenance headaches!

No need to be perplexed — come live on the shore at Netanya — Israel's greatest seaside resort.
